Critics' Choice Awards 2018: Red Carpet Dresses

by RADHIKA SETH AND ALICE NEWBOLD Friday 12 January 2018

LESS than one week after the Golden Globes 2018 – a politically charged ceremony that saw Hollywood's stars rally to raise awareness of the Time's Up movement – the Critics' Choice Awards called them to the red carpet once more. The 23rd Santa Monica-based ceremony, organised by the Broadcast Film Critics Association, saw many guests, including Reese Witherspoon, Elisabeth Moss, Laura Dern and Emilia Clarke, continue to run with the black dress code that dominated the Globes, but many celebrities, such as Angelina Jolie, Saoirse Ronan, Greta Gerwig, Diane Kruger and Kate Bosworth, switched it up and wore white.

Florence Pugh In Miu Miu – British Independent Film Awards 2017

The British Independent Film Awards took place on Sunday (December 10) on Old Billingsgate in London, with Florence Pugh in attendance.

I've never been shy about expressing my feelings about Miu Miu red carpet gowns, but this bronzed-gold tulle gown ticks all the right boxes from the fabric to the gentle smattering of embellishments.

I love how the fairytale nature is tempered by the smoldering eye makeup. I almost wouldn't be surprised if she was wearing chunky boot under her gown, as I sense a shimmering rebellious vibe here.

It's a British royal family tradition to attend the public service at the church of St Mary Magdalene in Sandringham on Christmas Day, and this year, Meghan Markle joined the family for the first time as they made the short walk to the church. Kate Middleton and Meghan dressed up for the occasion, facing the British Winter in the kind of chic coats that are now synonymous with the royals.

Kate opted for a red-and-green Miu Miu peacoat with a new black hat, while Meghan wore a camel Sentaler coat and a brown fascinator. While Meghan's outfit was more subdued, Kate's ensemble screamed Christmas cheer and the
