Pia Camil

Around the time when Donald Trump was elected president, the artist Pia Camil, 38, started working on one of the enormous textile pieces that have become emblematic of her practice. It was made of hundreds of T-shirts sewn together, allowing for people to stick their heads through the collars. The T-shirts had all been made in maquiladoras—American-owned factories in Mexico that use low-cost labor and export their product to the U.S. without paying taxes. Surplus T-shirts are often smuggled back into Mexico and sold in unsanctioned secondhand markets. “It’s important to call attention to the problems associated with how these items are created and consumed,” Camil says. Although she focused on painting while studying at Rhode Island School of Design and the Slade School of Fine Art, in London, and has done sculpture and performance, her work now, she says, revolves around the idea of audience participation. At New York’s New Museum, in 2016, she created a barter market in which visitors could exchange meaningful objects. At the Frieze New York art fair a year prior, Camil set up a stand to give away a series of ponchos she had made—soon, people were trying to purchase the garments outright, or offering bribes to cut in line. “It was a positive experience, because it generated so much interest and contact with the public,” Camil says. “But at the same time, it starkly showed the market side of the art world, and its power struggle.”

Currently on tour somewhere between Philadelphia, Arkansas, and the rest of the world, the 24-year-old synth-pop singer is a self-described alien who doesn't mind writing songs on airplanes.

"I honestly just woke up from a nap two minutes ago."

"I don't have a specific ritual for writing music. I've used for writing a certain time and for like, there are some things that I've written any time on a plane without any instruments."

"I've got a few more on my mind. I've got a few more on my mind. I've got a few more on my mind."

"I've got a few more on my mind. I've got a few more on my mind. I've got a few more on my mind."

"When I was growing up on Long Island, I had moments where I would look up and think, 'I don't really feel anything. I don't feel of being human.' That wasn't the title of my album, Alibi, comes from."

● The Regina isn't pretained by expensive scented candles – rather, it has an altogether different fragrance: it reeks of intrigue. There's a patina to this place. The chairs look "sit in", the waiters look "lived in". It doesn't zing with an eager-to-please, wifely friendly buzz or chime with the chatter of the newly wealthy. Instead you could sit, undetected (and unconnected), in a corner of its dark bar for days and no one would know.

The place has had many lives and was commandeered by the Nazis in the Second World War – the officers played table tennis in the library. Those who have stayed here tell stories of ghosts. One editor woke in the night with the distinct feeling that a paranormal entity was pinning her to the bed. Unlike the Costes, the Ritz or Le Meurice, people don't go to the Regina to be seen. They go to whisper gossip over vodka, knowing that they won't be overheard. The place is a keeper of secrets and, like all the best hotels, it's a blind-eyed, right-lipped facilitator for whatever you might fancy. You simply have to know the code. It was said that, until relatively recently, a single lady phoning down to reception to ask for an "extra pillow" could expect a visit from a handsome bellhop or barman. The place resonates with clandestine encounters.

No wonder Mrs Prada picked it as the location for her Miu Miu cruise 2019 show, held on a fevered Saturday night. It was sticky hot that evening in Paris as the international fashion community settled into the gilt chairs and velvet sofas lined up in the hotel lobby. The French football team had triumphed over Argentina in a tense, final 16 match at the World Cup and Gay Pride was in full swing. Its rainbow marchers paraded past the hotel as a prelude to the show.

Some bemused hotel guests, wearing the standard issue tourist uniform of bumbag, chinos and tennis shoes, attempted to make their way through the fashion crowd to the lift, but the lights went down, the music stilled and they were forced to watch the show instead.

Suddenly, through the revolving door of the lobby, came the teenage actress and activist Rowan Blanchard, in a full-length black satin gown with diamante and feather straps. Her serious little face was punctuated by a dark smudge of lipstick. She could have been heading to a premiere but for the yellow leather day bag she was carrying. Where did she get it? Next came Taylor Hill, in an oyster satin slip. Had a chivalrous date given her the boyfriend cardigan she was wearing over it? And why did she have pink, fluffy carpet slippers on her feet? One model wore a pink feather-trimmed babydoll negligee and carried a suitcase, another slipped a floral housecoat over her lilac vinyl hot pants. Camp 1960s bouffant pieces collided with daywear and every look told a story. It felt like we were watching a fabulous French farce with a cast of bedroom-hopping adventuresses. Indeed, the Regina has starred in movies before. Stephen Frears shot scenes from Cheri here, Luc Besson used it as a backdrop for Nikita, and Doug Liman gave it a cameo in The Bourne Identity.

To add to the filmic feel, many of the models were actresses. Chloe Sevigny, Kate Bosworth, Jaime King and Stranger Things star Sadie Sink all wandered the hotel lobby in 1980s-inflected peignours and babydolls. Gwendoline Christie took a turn in a leopard-lame coat fringed with extravagant leathers, but Uma Thurman stole the show, vamping and camping her way through the space in a floor-length gown and sporty satin coat.

Afterwards, Mrs Prada, resplendent in a hot pink shirtdress, spoke of bowing off the cuff the whole thing had been. She had decided to call the actresses to ask them to walk just a few days before the show. "It was the most spontaneous thing I've done in a long time," she said, smiling with delight. She also spoke of the sense of freedom she felt designing "in-between" shows such as cruise and pre-fall. "They are more fun," she said, compared with her more ready-to-wear outings, which she described as "serious".

Serious? Not tonight. The Miu Miu show segued into the Miu Miu Club. Kate Gerber changed from her catwalk look into sneakers and a mini, Thurman emerged in black sequins and mannish trousers, Rattley Cassidy and Sink snacked on risotto, and Mrs Prada had an intense conversation with Roman Polanski in one of those dimly lit corners. What did they talk about? We will never know. The Regina keeps its secrets. ●

Kate Mara showcases her full cleavage in stunning silver and peach Miu Miu look during the Golden Globes

By DAILYMAIL.COM REPORTER PUBLISHED: 03:19 GMT, 7 January 2019

She's a red carpet regular. And Kate Mara looked stylish-as-be at the Golden Globe awards at the Beverly Hilton Hotel on Sunday. The Pose talent, 35, was the epitome of elegance wearing a silver and peach empire-waist Miu Miu gown which framed her full cleavage with a triangular peek-a-boo cut-out.

Red carpet style: Kate Mara looked sensational in an embellished Miu Miu frock during the Golden Globes Sunday. Silver beaded shoulders connected to an overly-embellished bodice that transitioned down into a dreamy peach skirt with a lace detail near the bottom. Kate teamed her frock, which was styled by Johnny Wujek, with a white Miu Miu clutch, diamond rings, delicate post earrings and an edgy-chic ear cuff.

Nicole Kidman In Miu Miu – 2019 AACTA International Awards

The one person I was expecting to see at the 2019 Australian Academy of Cinema and Television Arts (AACTA) International Awards on Friday (January 4) was Nicole Kidman, who picked up the Best Supporting Actress gong for 'Boy Erased.'

You may be surprised to learn that the black crepe gown with white organza plumetis top was from Miu Miu.

We've become used to Miu Miu gowns hitting the red carpet decked out in embellishments, so perhaps this is a signal that their red carpet M.O. is about to change for 2019.

Nicole looked flawless, as you would expect. So sophisticated, while oozing plenty of drama. This is the Nicole I absolutely adore.

Golden Globes 2019: Red Carpet Dresses

The Golden Globes 2019 red carpet marks the start of the annual awards season calendar, as usual welcoming the most prominent stars of the big and small screens. In the past, the Golden Globes have been considered a more lighthearted addition to the awards circuit, but last year's ceremony marked a long-awaited shift in Hollywood. Punctuating a sombre time, as the Me Too movement and Time's Up campaign gained traction, the conversation of 2018's ceremony - from the red carpet to the speeches - centred around sexual harassment and gender inequality in the industry. While the all-black dress code of last year's awards may not have prevailed this year, the attention is still firmly on the changes many wish to see in the industry: numerous guests signalled their commitment to fighting sexual inequality with Time's Up bracelets and ribbons that read #TimesUpx2.
