Duchess Meghan of Sussex once again joined Queen Elizabeth II for a public engagement, this time accompanied by new husband Prince Harry, when they all hosted a reception at Buckingham Palace for the Queen's Young Leaders Awards on June 26, 2018.

The duchess wore Prada and, unlike the devil, she was charming and gracious to all.

The new Duchess Meghan of Sussex wore a blush pink Prada skirt suit when she joined husband Prince Harry and grandmother-in-law Queen Elizabeth II at a Buckingham Palace reception Tuesday evening.

The occasion was a party for the Queen's Young Leaders Awards, a program that celebrates the achievements of what the palace calls young "change-makers" from across the Commonwealth.

Harry and Meghan were there because the new Duke and Duchess of Sussex will be taking a leading role in the Commonwealth, the organization of former British Empire nations that is dear to the queen.

Duchess Meghan of Sussex, Prince Harry and Queen Elizabeth II posed for a group photo at the Queen's Young Leaders Awards reception at Buckingham Palace in London, June 26, 2018. Meghan wore a powder pink skirt suit by Prada featuring a belted short sleeve jacket with double-breasted button front and an A-line midi skirt.

Married little more than a month, the former American actress Meghan Markle, 36, has appeared with the queen multiple times since the May 19 wedding, including spending a day alone with Her Majesty for multiple engagements in Cheshire on June 14.

Meghan Markle has made her latest royal appearance, this time with both her husband, Prince Harry, and Her Majesty The Queen, and it seems the Duchess decided to try out Prada for the occasion. The Duke and Duchess were attending the Queen's Young Leaders Awards Ceremony, an event that celebrates special achievements of youths across the United Kingdom.

In an unexpected move, Markle debuted a pale blush-toned Prada dress with a double-breasted bodice, the perfect surprise for any royal watchers who were hoping to see the Duchess take a departure from Givenchy as she finds her sartorial feet within the British royal family.

The belted dress also had a familiar neckline—while slightly more square than a traditional batteau, it was certainly reminiscent of Markle's Givenchy wedding dress neckline, a style she also wore to the 2018 Trooping the Colour. The dress was paired with a Prada clutch as well as a pair of black suede pumps in what seems to be Markle's favourite shoe label—Aquazzura.

This was an important appearance for the newlyweds which speaks volumes of her choice to debut a piece by the Italian house of Prada. Earlier this year, The Duke of Sussex was named The Queen's Commonwealth Youth
